

Marx's Capital – Harvey's Way – Belief and Other Literature, and Disciplines

By Shomit Sirohi

Introduction

Marx then argues – many styles exist, but not the belief which I call the correct style – a belief which is in fact Marxist style belief -which means philosophers have to be educated and that is education which means he himself must have been educated by the people. This syllogism means that education is important but not at the cost of not being aware of the labour plight of the people and that will then be true education – this

Marx calls the correct way of educating oneself and being a Marxist or a Marx following person.

I. So Belief then in Marx's Capital

Today people believe in many ideas, and concepts and economic styles even – but actually Marx's Capital is what one should believe in, even dogmatically because it is the most brilliant proof of the structure of capital and this then is a question of belief – even in trade unions, people's labouring work and Communism perhaps as well.

II. Dogmatic Belief then makes it to Expressions Like Literature or Sociology and so Integrated Method

And so in fact Kafka's Metamorphosis becomes one way of reading Marx in literature, and so it can be also like deconstruction of Marx and labour studies of Kafka and Jewishness – all of this expresses the other subject in Marxist manners – and is just so expressive like a reading a Marxist labour activist would be open to doing. Interpreting it as it were. So be interested in dogmatic belief or belief in Marx's capital and also read other things – that I would call the correct formation of an intellectual or world-view today especially when we are overrun with other styles and fashions of analysis.
